

Dear Indiana Educator:

You don't have to be convinced

You're already keenly interested in bringing more interactivity and collaboration into your classrooms because you know it increases student learning and increases student engagement. You'd like to learn more. But you're also facing budget cuts and just don't have the luxury of a lot of extra time.

Crothersville Community Schools in Crothersville, Indiana, has the perfect solution. In fact, it's a simple mathematical formula.

Introducing the You+Us=Interactivity in the Classroom Mini-Conference on June 15, 2010

Our half-day, high-ROI, no-fee conference will provide practical insights into the integration and utilization of interactive classroom technologies, as well as the opportunity to network with others that want to know more and do know more. So it's hands-on and you'll get to shake some hands. Meet up with your peers: superintendents, educators and community leaders from across Indiana, Kentucky, Ohio and Illinois, as well as representatives from industry-leading educational technology companies such as Apple Education, Education Networks of America (ENA), Promethean Interactive Whiteboards, Empower Learning (Promethean Reseller), Onsite Manufacturing, and Asset Recovery and Recycling, along with our eager staff and students who will be ably demonstrating a wide variety of classroom technologies.

With hot interactive technologies and a cool venue, it's well worth your time

You'll see the very latest in 21st century teaching and learning tools at work in real educational settings: interactive whiteboards, wireless responders, Apple iPads, classroom sound systems, K-2 interactive assessment tools, student interactive software solutions and more. And with our nearly new (2003) school more than adequately comfortable, no registration fees and lunch on us, you're left with absolutely no excuses. You will come and you will be glad you did.
